THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1873.

THE CHARLESTON DAILY NEWS "Is designs ted as the newspaper for the publication of "all legal notices, and official advertisements, of the County of Charleston, under the act of February 22d, 1870, entitled an act to regusolate the publication of all legal and public "notices."

the office of grand vizier, and to inaugurate the system of ministerial responsibility. .The sale of copies of the New York Daily News containing the account of Foster's exe-

"I can't say," replied the author of "Lothair." "for I have only seen her once; she was then sliting between General Schenck's two daughters, and I thought she had some indirect claims to good looks."

-There is soon to be started in London a political club, which is to be composed of ladies as well as gentlemen. It is to be of a decidedly Republican turn, and the ladies are to combine for the purpose of improving taking up the project with quite as much in- their condition is unquestionable. This terest, if not more, than the gentlemen, quite outdoing them in enthusiasm. Among the names known to American readers are those of Mr. and Mrs. Moncure D. Conway.

-San Francisco is said to be the only seaport of the United States employing more American than foreign tonnage. In 1872 American vessels brought into San Francisco goods valued at nearly thirty millions of dolten millions. The grain exports last year employed vessels with 124,633 American tonnage and 101,440 foreign tonnage—these grain cargoes nearly all being bound to ports on the Atlantic.

They are both from the same county, I believe, in Massachusetts, and there is some very distant family relationship, but that is all."

-When Paris was invested, over seventy applications were made to the government to employ pigeons to communicate with friends beyond the investing lines. These were at first rejected with ridicule, but as the slege went on, and ballooning became fashionable, and even members of the government became accustomed to high and airy voyaging, the project of pigeon expresses met with more lavor. The little messengers did very well, and out of three hundred and sixtythree sent, seventy-three re-entered Paris. Two carrier-pigeons made four return voyages, and are now the especial pets of Madame Thiers and Jules Favre. Most wonderful of all, the one hundred and fitteen thousand dispatches carried, after being photographically reduced, weighed, as a total, only the thirtleth part of an ounce.

addressed a petition to Bismarck, in the name of the municipal council, requesting that the French tongue might be regularly taught in the elementary schools of the city, together with the German. The chief ground of the necessity for maintaining a general knowledge of French among the Strasbourgers is the commercial intercourse with France which the situation of the place entails. The Chancellor has answered the petitioners under his own, hand with a very decided negative, declaring that while he does justice to the motives of their proposal, he cannot regard such a measure as the use of two tongues as applicable to the work of elementary teaching. It is much better, in his view, Prince Bismarck goes on to state, that the children should be thoroughly taught in one, for it would be out of all experience that they could possibly learn both so completely as to be to their own advantage. "So far as is known," the Prince sarcastically concludes, "on the further side of the frontier the German tongue is never taught in the French achools, from which it may be gathered that the supposed necessity of a mutual knowledge of the topgues of neighboring States has not been discovered in those snapped the joints of his fingers with a bitter expression of countenance, as if thereby to get rid of some hideous hallucination which afflicted him. The amount belonging to him ure of the bill exempting manufactories of which was in jeopardy was $40, with which, if he could draw it, he had hoped to meet a very pressing bill. The smallness of the check and the greatness of the necessity of getting it cashed, formed a ludicrous contrast. In the midst of his singularly incoherent ravings, tears actually started from his eyes, and his face turned purple with emotion. He was at length quieted somewhat by the comforting ministrations of the persons about him, whose persuasions induced him to believe that matters were not so bad as they seemed. Still he could not get his money in time to settle his bill, and he went away downhearted.

The scenes around the office of the Bull's Head Bank, in New York, when the news of the suspension became noised abroad, are described as anything but harmonious. The bank was one of the oldest in the State, and possessed such a fine reputation for the safety of its deposits that the wealthy and the poor alike had entrusted their money to its care. Capitalists and workingmen and women were clamo.ous to learn their tate on the morning of the suspension, and they crowded about the office in a state of the wildest excitement. Apoor and trembling man came rushing up with a crumpled bank check in his hand, and riveted, by his frantic actions, the gaze of all those present. He wrung his hands and "ful imagination."

The Threatened Strike.

It may not be true that sixty-five thousand working men intend to strike, in a body, in the Northern cities some time next month, but there is reason for believing that the coming year will be marked by agitation and discontent amongst the laboring classes, and, possibly, by a sharper fight between money and muscle than this country has ever before known.

Any set of men have an undoubted right to combine for the purpose of obtaining a higher price for their work. The individual is powerless where an organized body of workers can readily accomplish the desired result. But the relation between wages and demand and supply cannot be permanently altered by a strike for shorter hours or an advance of wages. Frequently the workingmen cannot tell whether their employers can, or cannot, afford to pay more than they are doing. A strike soon settles the question; inasmuch as employers will continue their operations only as long as they can do so at a profit. It is true that the necessity of completing contracts already made, or a brighter prospect in the near future, sometimes induces them to face a temporary loss, but, for long together, they cannot work without a profit. Money is entitled to wages, as manual labor is and as brain work is. It is when it is attempted to force wages above the level which allows the employer a reasonable profit that a strike fails. The strike of 1872, in the North, cost the laborers at least two million dollars, and the employers fully as much. - It is estimated that New York City has to-day one thousand buildings less than she would have had if the strike had not taken place. The workmen have lost the wages which would have been paid out during the construction of the houses; the employers lost the profit which they would have realized on the work. It is difficult to see where any one was the gainer; outside of the coterie of professional agitators who encourage strife, and do what in them lies to keep labor and capital at sword's point. These agitators live and grow fat while factories close and operatives starve. As we have said, the right of workingmen right is their heritage, not as laborers but as men. The employers have an equal right to combine for the purposes of self-protection. And any laborer, or any employer, has an absolute right to hold aloof from, or withdraw from, any society or combination, whether its object be to protect labor or money, to raise wages or to lower them. lare, whilst foreign vessels brought less than This is a point which the leaders in the clare that they will give the law to workmen as well as employers. Mob law is their game. It is a cardinal principle that society has no authority over the actions of an individual which affect exclusively his own ining in a strike, his free will, so manifested, has the same authority as the equally free determination of his companions to take part in the strike. There is fally as much of tyranny in forcing an unwilling man to leave his work as in compelling an unwilling man to remain at work. The question is one for individual decision, and not for collective decision. This is a hoint which cannot be urged too strongly upon the attention of both laborers and employers. It is easily understood that employers very rarely volunteer to pay their laborers higher wages. The advance is obtained by a demand for it. When the demand fails, the usual remedy is a strike. But, as before shown, the strike cannot prevail, if the increased wages asked for so increase the entire cost of the work as to make it unprofitable, or leads to such an advance in the price charged to customers as will cause them to discontinue their orders. And there are considerations in the employment of capital which are frequently disregarded. Because a master-builder makes money this year it does not follow that he made money last year or will do so next year. He has to make up the losses of previous years, and to provide for the future. The laborer has no such risk. It would seem, therefore, that only a frank understanding between capitalist and laborer can prevent differences of opinion which are injurious to both. The laborers are ready to listen to reason when their paid demagogues are out of the way: the employers only expect a reasonable average profit upon their capital. Surely the representatives of the two classes could do more by friendly consultation than by declaring war upon each other. It should, also, be remembered that any increase of cost in any article of consumption or use falls upon the public. A strike which enhances the cost of shoes is felt by every man, woman and child who does not go barefooted. The answer will be that there must be an advance of wages in every calling, so that the mason who pays more for his shoes may be compensated by the higher pay he receives for his own work. But it is evident that a universal rise of prices is tantamount to no advance at all. What is gained in one quarter is lost in another.

We still hope that the threatened strike in the North may be averted; for it is to be feared that, if the plans of the promoters be carried out, every department of trade will suffer, the public peace will be endangered, and neither workmen nor employers will derive any lasting benefit from the dissension and turmoil of the time.

-The leading poem in the Atlantic Monthly for April is Mr. Paul H. Hayne's "Woodiake," which is printed in another column. The Boston Globe particularly commends the poem as an example of "great delicacy of description and a thought-

Mazufacturing Movements.

-The Spartanburg Spartan regrets the failcertain kinds from taxation to become a law, and tantalizingly draws a vivid picture o what "might have been." The poor would find employment, which would keep them from being a load on the taxpayer, and the latter class would experience a like benefit. The inducement, also, offered to men of wealth to reside here, with their families, would add much to the taxable property. In conclusion, it hopes that the Legislature next session will promptly pass the Exemption bill.

-The Sumter Watchman demonstrates the vital importance of manufactures to the rising South. Before the war, manufacturing was monopolized by the North, and the Southern States had nothing but the cultivation of their own fleecy staple. This state of things was brought about by slavery chiefly. White labor was necessary for manufactures. The spell is now broken; slavery is abolished, white laborers throng the country with willing hearts and ready hands, and now is the time for manufactories to loom up on every side, and by their active, industrial influence lend a steady support and strength to the gradually rising South.

-The Columbia Phoenix speaks in glowing terms of the many benefits which accrue to those towns in which manufactories are established. The wages paid hands every week, it says, go to the support of stores, shops, schools, churches, farms and garden. Life and animation follow the diversity of pursuits, as created in mannnfacturing establishments. It is true that this sort of prosperity is retarded in the State by the refusal of the Legislature to exempt manufacturing capital from taxation; but it is confidently hoped that this will be remedied on the reassembling of the State Legislature, when the people will, it believes, look to their own interests and see to the increase of manufactories of various kinds in South Carolina.

Agassiz vs. Darwin.

There will be many to rejoice that Professor Agassiz, who is, we suppose, the most distinguished of living naturalists, is no Darwinian. On the 6th instant, in a lecture at Cambridge, Mass., he said: "Man is said to be the crown-"ing point of an ascending scale. Unquestion-"ably he is the highest created being, but he "is the culminating point especially of his own series-of that vertebrate series to which he belongs. No invertebrate animal has any "structural relation to man whatever, while "every member of his own type has an intimate structural relation with him. The lim-"Itations keeping each primary type within its own boundaries have not been sufficiently considered, and are, indeed, generally wholly lost sight of. This carelessness of investigation, or of statement, gives currency to broad generalizations, partially true indeed, but 'false when they are made to cover too wide 'a ground."

LECTURES ON LIGHT. Delivered in the United States in the winter of 1872-73. By Professor John Tyndall, LL. D., F. R. S. New York: D. Appleton & Co. Charleston: Holmes's Book House.

Many of the thousands who listened to the lectures of Professor Tyndail, and more theusands who did not, will welcome their publication. Revised by the author himself, and accompanied by numerous illustrations, they will interest the reader almost as much as they did those who heard them. In vivid ness of description, felicity of explanation, and clearness of demonstration, the lectures may well serve as models for imitation. They are valuable aids in popularizing science, and strikes usually overlook, and they now de- it is pleasant to remember that Professor Tyndail carries away with him none but pleasant memories of the United States, and that the success of his efforts was incontestible. The receipts at the thirty-five lectures were $23,100, of which amount the surplus of $13,000, remaining after the deduction of expenses, has been devoted by Prolessor Tyn-Richardson, says: "The secretary and as- is advantageous to him to refrain from join- dail to aiding students engaged in original researches. This edition of Cooper's novels is noticeable for its typographical clearness, the excellence of the llustrations, and the lowness of the price. Like good wine, which needs no bush, the familiar "Pilot"-Cooper's best nautical novel-requires no new recommendation to the reading public.

HANDBOOK OF SOCIAL ECONOMY; OR, THE WORKER'S A B C. By Edmond About. (Translated from the latest French edition.) New York: D. Appleton & Co. Charleston Holmes's Book House.

This book was written by M. About at the request of some Parislan workmen, who avowed themselves ignorant of the doctrines of political economy, and asked for "a few hours tamillar talk" about Wealth, Capital, Income, Labor, Wages, Taxation and Money. It is admirably adapted to the purpose for which it was intended, and, although necessarily illustrating the views of the author by examples which are more familiar to a Frenchman than to an American, it may be read everywhere with profit. The style is bright and epigrammatic, and the explanations are so direct and simple that they force conviction upon minds wholly unacquainted with the broad truths of economic science. The underlying principle of the book is that "the poor man ought to wish for the opulence of the "rich, and do so in his own interest," and that the rich ought to wish the poor to be well off. "and do so out of pure selfishness." And the conclusion arrived at is expressed in the words of the Koran: "Man hath nothing to expect "save from the fruit of his labor." The chapter on Liberty or the Freedom of Exchange is singularly forcible, and throughout the book the demonstrations and applications are logical and complete. We do not agree with M. About in some of his statements, as, for instance, where he makes the increase or decrease of price correspond to the increase or decrease of supply; but it was probably his desire to avoid giving exceptions where general rules would serve his purpose.

M. About's book might be perused with profit in South Carolina, where, as events show, the bulk of the people know as much of political economy as of Sanscrit.

The translator has done his part of the work very well, but he should have given a table of French weights and measures, or, better still, reduced them to the American standard. A "hectare" or a "hectolitre" does not convey any very clear idea to the average American. Cloth. 284 pages. Price $2.
